(By International News Service)

DOYLESTOWN, June 12.—Ten persons were endangered and four slightly injured when a passenger bus of the Great Easton Stage Company crashed into the stone wall of the Edison Bridge on the Easton Pike two miles south of here early today.

The driver of the bus, Harry E. Peirce, 30, of Philadelphia, told state police he was hampered by fog and blamed a faulty steering gear for the accident.

The bus crashed through the stone wall and hung dangerously over an 18-foot drop while the passengers made their way to safety through a rear door.

Those injured were: Dr. Harlan Bartholomew, 28, Philadelphia, a recent medical school graduate. He sustained cuts about the face but treated the other injured, who were his wife, Mrs. Marguerite Bartholomew; Miss Frances Fish, a nurse in the St. Francis Hospital, at Trenton, N. J.; Samuel Marans, of Atlantic City.

The bus was bound from Philadelphia to Easton. All the passengers except Miss Fish continued in another bus. Miss Fish returned to Philadelphia; she was painfully cut about the face.

HILLTOWN DIRECTORS ASK
COURT TO DISMISS BILL

Board Members Say Legal Requirements Were Met in Floating Bond Issue to Finance New Building — Term Some of the Charges as "Malicious"

DOYLESTOWN, June 12.—In an answer to the bill in equity restraining them from proceeding with the erection of a $110,000 consolidated school for Hilltown township, the defendant school directors of the township have filed a statement averring that all procedure in connection with the floating of the bond issue has been entirely legal.

It is further stated by the board in the answer, filed by Attorney Mark Thatcher, that many of the charges in the bill in equity are made with "false, malicious, and libelous intent to discredit the defendants," and the directors ask that the costs of the proceedings, as well as the expenditures for the advertising for bids be placed on the complainant, William O. Schell.

The charges of the bill in equity are denied in detail in all important points.

A specific and emphatic denial is made of the charge that the plans of the proposed school were so designed as to give work and orders to certain manufacturers, who are the sole controllers of such material in this section.

Stating that the charge was made with false, malicious, and libelous intent, "to discredit the defendants as well as all other persons advising or working with them in connection with the construction of the consolidated school building," the reply of the directors describes the plans as being "expertly drawn, definite, certain, and fair in all respects, as are the blueprints, all of which is evidenced by the documents themselves and by the very large number of bids that were received upon advertising therefor."

It is stated that the plans are not drawn to favor any person furnishing material, and that they are drawn so that any competent person can bid intelligently.

The accusation that the sale of school bonds will create an unlawful increase in the indebtedness of the district for nine specific reasons, is denied in full.

The bond issue has been approved by the Department of Internal Affairs, the directors state, and the charge that they are not registered with the Department of Internal Revenue is "immaterial," since there is no law demanding that they should be.

A direct denial is made of the accusation that the directors have failed to file a statement in the office of the clerk of Quarter Sessions court. It is stated that this was done, in all regularity.

"The school board has not failed to secure the approval of any department in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania whose approval is necessary to the validity of the said bond issue," the reply states.

The school directors had also been accused of increasing the bonded indebtedness of the township beyond its legal limit, and this is denied.

"It is admitted that the sale of the bonds increases the indebtedness of the township more than two percent, but it is averred that the increase is within the constitutional limits of municipal indebtedness, and has been approved by the electors of the township at a special election held September 9, 1929," the reply makes clear.

The problem of central location, the trouble that brought on the fight, is also taken up by the school directors in the reply.

"It is averred that the proposed site is midway between the eastern and western boundary lines of the township, and on the only improved highway which traverses the entire township."

"The selection of the site was unanimous by the board of directors, and in selecting same, they were not guided by anything but the dictates of their respective judgments, based upon the best interests of the taxpayers of Hilltown," it is stated.

It is further said that the site is the most suitable, desirable, and adaptable for the purpose in the township, in direct denial of the statements of the Taxpayers' Association.

The answer closes as follows:

"For further answer to the bill of complaint, it is averred that the same is not made in good faith or for the benefit of the taxpayers of Hilltown township, but only for the purpose of impeding, delaying and interfering with and discrediting the defendants as well as all others who advise and work with them in connection with the bond issue and the erection of the proposed building, because the defendants failed to comply with the demands of this complainant and some others associated with him to accept as a site, one which it was demanded by them that the defendants should select; further, that instead of benefiting the taxpayers of Hilltown township, the institution of this proceeding, as well as other proceedings already terminated, and still other proceedings still pending, will result in actual loss and detriment to the taxpayers of Hilltown township."

"Wherefore, the complainant is not entitled to any of the relief that he seeks nor any other relief, and should have the pending complaint dismissed against him, with costs upon him, and respectfully submit that this be done."

"The defendants do further aver that in the advertising for bids for the sale of said bonds and for the construction of the consolidated school building, all in performance of their duties as school directors of the School District of Hilltown township, in pursuance of the mandate of the taxpayers of said township, duly expressed at the special election held on September 9, 1929, they have been required to expend a large sum of money of the public funds of the said school district by reason of the bill in equity filed to which this answer is made."

"That by reason of the facts hereinbefore set forth, the said defendants are in need of equitable relief, and do hereby pray that the same be granted, as follows:

"(1) That the complainant, as well as all other persons for whom, or on whose alleged behalf he has brought this proceeding, be forever restrained and enjoined from further interfering with or impeding the acts of the said defendants in selling and imposing of the bonds as aforesaid, and in advertising for, and awarding the contract for the erection of the said consolidated school building."

"(2) That the complainant be required to pay the costs of this proceeding as well as the costs incurred by the defendants in connection with the advertising for bids for the sale of (Continued on Page 4)

BIOGRAPHIC LOTS

Reading biography is said to be now the rage, but it pales in comparison with the passions of those who write it. Political bigotries stalk at large, often degenerating into private hates. Some of the biographers reveal more of themselves than of the man they would portray.

True biography has much in common with the writing of plays. The primary requisite is candor—the breadth of view that holds an equal balance between contending forces. Only on such a basis can the dramatic personae, the characters in the biography, be made vital and convincing.

Candor and broad tolerance fill the page with vitality and color—with engaging truth. The ultimate result of the present biographic rage is self-destruction.

America's increasing taste for biography is a healthy sign. It reveals an appetite for something deeper than mere entertainment. Biography is the very quintessence of history, and a knowledge of history is a valuable aid to a self-governing people.

Biographers are not uniformly impartial and unbiased, but readers of biographies are apt to lose some of their prejudices and intolerance. It is unfortunate that the knowledge of history of most persons is limited to that sketchy outline obtained from school textbooks.

SACRED

The work of all scientists and teachers is itself religious, not figuratively but intrinsically. Any form of religion which tends to deny the spiritual quality in the best achievement of the best minds, when moving along the verges of the known and peering into the mystery about, is by its very nature destined to be passed by and discarded as the quest proceeds.

A creed may maintain itself by force of repetition for long stretches of time, but it cannot permanently live unless the ideal it interprets harmonizes with the understanding of things gained by intelligence. The ideal cannot ignore the testimony of the reality without stultifying the mind by which truth is apprehended. The endeavor of these seekers after the truth in their several fields—as of all who explore the mystery of life with reverent attitude and honest mind—is at one with that which religion sanctifies and accepts in the categories of the sacred.

No act of a legislature, no decision of a court, no pronouncement of a creed, can stand permanently against a dissenting revelation which the Creator makes to the mind of man in his creation. It is a violation of the very sacrament of man's intelligence not to accept the irrefutable facts and laws of its discovery, a profanation, a sinning against the light.

More accidents result from the highway loafer than from the highway speeder.

Even those persons who pray only as a last resort have the audacity to expect results.

The husband who forgets to shave when his wife is away from home never causes her uneasiness.

Thrown upon her own resources, Mary Lou Thurston, beautiful and vivacious orphan, applies for a position as companion to a semi-invalid in the palatial home of Mrs. Lorrimer at Westmill, Connecticut. Mrs. Lorrimer explains the ad should have read "male" as the invalid is her son, Travers, shell-shocked in the war. As Mary Lou is about to leave, Travers enters. He seizes her in his arms, calling her "Delight" and "wife." Then he faints when Mary Lou fails to respond to his caresses. Mrs. Lorrimer persuades Mary Lou to assume the role of Delight Hartford, whom Travers claims he married in England, in order to help him regain his health.

CHAPTER XIII.

"I'm going to take you to your rooms," Mrs. Lorrimer told her. "They are right off mine, a suite which belonged, as long as she lived, to my sister, who came to stay with me shortly after the death of my husband and who followed him three years later. I think you will be happier near me," she went on, slipping her arm through Mary Lou's, "and as I had the rooms redecorated last year I hope you will find them pleasant."

They went through Mrs. Lorrimer's bedroom to a suite of three rooms, not very large but very attractive and comfortable. There was a small, charming sitting room, decorated in blue and silver. Silver tea-box paper covered the walls. The draperies and rug and small tub sofa were in deep sapphire blue. The contrasting color was a mellow, sunny primrose, used in cushions and accessories. There was even a little, quite authentic, fireplace with a beautiful mantel.

Fit for a Queen

The bedroom was in deep ivory, with the curtains of primrose and casual touches of blue. A delightful dressing table and bureau and a three-quarter bed, very modern in treatment, several lounging chairs, reading lights, bookcases and a sewing table completed the furnishings, while the adjoining bathroom, in pale blue, with marbleized wall paper and the fittings in deep yellow marble, was very attractive.

Mrs. Lorrimer opened a door and disclosed a deep, cedar-lined closet, with built-in shoe and stocking boxes and racks for hats.

"Do you like it?" she asked, anxiously.

"I love it," cried Mary Lou, wandering about happily, looking at everything with interest and pleasure and excitement.

"It is becoming to you," Mrs. Lorrimer told her, smiling.

She went back into the sitting room and drew Mary Lou down beside her on the sofa, amusing little girl.

"What are your plans regarding your people?" she asked seriously.

"They will send you things out, will they not?"

Mary Lou thought a moment.

"If I could telephone," she said, "to Larry Mitchell. I'll have to take someone into my confidence, and I would rather it were he. I will write Uncle Howard and Clara," she went on, as if to herself, "and I will tell them and Larry the truth. Larry can write me, under—"

"under my new name. He can attend to sending out my things. I haven't very much," she confessed, "and of course, as neither Aunt Adelaide nor Gram ever dream of writing a letter, I won't have to do any unnecessary explaining to them. They have a phone and I can say that I have taken a position and am staying right on and that I will keep in touch with them about Billy."

"You have a telephone right in this room," Mrs. Lorrimer reminded her, "so it will be quite private. I'll give you things for tonight and see that you are made comfortable until your trunks come. And when the new arrangement has settled down into a routine sort of affair, you and I will go to New York and shop for clothes, lots of them!"

Mary Lou flushed deeply, a little indignantly, and her chin went up.

"I haven't much, as I told you," she said quietly, "but I have plenty. I'd rather you wouldn't bother, Mrs. Lorrimer."

"Please don't be angry at me or offended," Margaret Lorrimer said, softly. "That plan was part of our bargain and was made for my own selfish pleasure, for I've always wanted a daughter!" She smiled appealingly. "When Travers was a little boy I used to so envy all mothers of little girls. I always wanted to dress one," she confessed, "and now—now that I have a real live flesh-and-blood one you must permit me to indulge

Mrs. Lorrimer gave the true explanation and asked their help.

Meanwhile Mary Lou, after some difficulty, had reached Larry and was talking to him.

Warranted Concern

She told him briefly that she had accepted the position and was not returning to Oakdale. She asked him if he could possibly take time off the following day to go down to Oakdale and see that her trunk and her box of books and personal belongings and suitcase were expressed to her. Everything was still packed, with the exception of a few things which would go in the suitcase and which Gram would attend to for her. She asked him to send them, not to Mary Lou Thurston, but to "Miss Delight Hartford," and, upon his amazed exclamation, she assured him that she couldn't explain over the wire, but would send him a letter that evening, by special delivery, and ended by informing him she was happy, content and pleased with her "job" and that a little later he

"After all," added Mary Lou, bluntly, "I'm not your daughter."

An Ideal Mother

Mary Lou said, doubtfully: "But it doesn't seem fair—to you. After all," added Mary Lou, bluntly, "I'm not your daughter!"

But she wished she were, in her heart. Mrs. Lorrimer looked at her and smiled.

"But you are," she said quickly, "if only—in make-believe."

Mary Lou considered the older woman a moment and thought of what she had been through, of these years, of her courage and her unclouded sweetness of disposition, of her tremendous charm. And capitulated suddenly.

"If you really want to—" surrendered Mary Lou.

A little later Mrs. Lorrimer called her staff of devoted and trusted servants together in her morning room—"office," as she called it—downstairs, and made certain explanations to those who had been with her for any length of time, including Peter, Hilda, her personal maid, and the cook, who had been with her since her marriage. The rest of the staff was comparatively new and it was perfectly easy to involve them partly in the deception. As far as they were concerned, Miss "Harford" was a friend of "poor Mr. Travers," who had come to make Mrs. Lorrimer a long visit. If they suspected romance or a more detailed story they were at liberty to do so, but to those servants who had been with her since Travers' return from France and earlier, must come out to see her, Mrs. Lorrimer having readily given her this permission.

Larry was agog. There is no word for it. He pleaded, demanded and questioned, but Mary Lou, who, if truth must be told, was rather enjoying herself by mystifying him, was adamant. He would get a letter from her tomorrow, she said, and would say no more.

After that she telephoned Oakdale and had a terrible time making Gram Jennings understand where she was and that she was all right and was going to stay. The old lady was afraid of the telephone and privately considered it an invention of the devil, and only Clara's insistence some years ago had resulted in her having it installed. But finally she was made aware of the fact that Mary Lou had procured an excellent position as companion, the one she had hoped to procure, and Larry would be down some time during the next day to relieve Mrs. Jennings of the trouble of expressing the trunk.

And Mary Lou promised, after sending her love to Billy, to call up every few days and find out how that young man might be. Finally, exhausted, for Aunt Adelaide kept shouting questions in her mother's ear, Mary Lou replaced the telephone, for she wasn't awfully used to the French kind, anyway, and found herself talking into the receiver several times. Going to the desk in the living room she drew out pen and paper and proceeded to write many pages to Larry in full explanation of what, as she put it, she seemed to be "in for."

THE JEANETTE MacDONALD CHEST

What gift could be more ideal for the girl graduate—the bride—or for mother herself than a Lane Cedar Chest?

This superbly designed chest is, by a wide margin, the most outstanding value ever offered in cedar chests. Notice the deep wood carvings—all hand work—and the splendid balance of line and design. From far-off Burma, from African jungles and from American trees that were old when Washington took Yorktown, came the rare woods used to create its modern contrasting colorfulness. # STATE NEWS

DICKSON CITY, June 12.—(INS)—If you believe in astrology, prepare for unrest, religious outbreaks, death of world figures and a continuance of the economic depression.

For that's what Victor Dovitch, local astrologer, predicts for the next few months. Dovitch, who spends most of his spare time consulting astrological charts and instruments, lists these among forecasted happenings:

Death of President von Hindenburg, of Germany; possible assassination of Mustapha Kemal, ruler of Turkey; religious wars in Egypt and Palestine; earthquakes in Argentina, Brazil and Japan, and a continuation of the present depression.

A miner who became interested in astrology, Dovitch took it up as a "hobby," he says, and since doing so has gained a considerable local reputation as a prophet.

"Astrology," he said, "will soon come into its own. It has been held back by superstition. It is not bunk, nor crystal-gazing, nor fortune-telling nor any of that mythical stuff. It is a mathematical science involving a tremendous use of spherical trigonometry."

R. O. Taylor, of St. Louis, Mo., arrived at the home of his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Taylor, of 328 Roosevelt street, where he is spending several days this week.

HARRIMAN INCREASES ITS LEAD IN LEAGUE

By T. M. Jono

Defeating the Federals last night on St. Ann's Field, the Harriman Field Club increased its lead of the Bristol Twilight League to one and one-half games. The final score of the tilt was 10-0.

Joe Kohler won his fifth consecutive mound victory for the Harriman Club and held the losers to four hits. He received fine support from his mates and never was in doubt as to whether he would win or lose.

"Bill" Fine hurried for the last year's champions and deserved a better fate than accorded him. His co-players erred eight times behind him and always kept him in hot water. The only way Fine seemed to retire the side was to fan the batters and he did this in fine style, striking out eleven men in five innings. The Harriman Field Club made seven hits from his delivery but four were of the scratch variety.

Joe Wilkinson was hit with a pitched ball twice during the game, making the seventh and eighth time that he has reached base in this manner.

"Larry" David and George Dougherty with two hits each led the hitters. The Sixth Warders have now won six games and lost one while the Independents, in second place, have won four and lost two.

The Harriman team has released Arthur Hirsch and signed John Whitaker. The box score:

Advice to Girls

By NANCY LEE.

DEAR NANCY LEE: I have been keeping company for quite a while and although not engaged we have an understanding that we will marry some day. What is proper: to have my sweetheart meet my mother or to go to her mother's home to get acquainted?

ANXIOUS.

ANSWER: It is usual to bring the young man to meet the mother of the girl first.

DEAR NANCY LEE: I am a girl in my early teens and would love to try my luck at toe dancing. My parents hate to think I love such a thing (stagey) and flatly refuse to help me. I feel I could succeed if properly taught as my whole heart is in it. Dear Nancy Lee, can you show me a way out, without giving up?

FRANCES.

ANSWER: If there is a movie theatre handling stage presentations anywhere in your neighborhood, why not go and have a talk with the man or woman who handles the production end, or who trains the units. But, of course, before doing this discuss the matter with your parents and obtain their permission.

PROMINENT PHYSICIAN ENDORSES ACTONA

Dr. Charles J. Roberts, graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and a prominent physician of Philadelphia's Main Line, has come forward with an unqualified endorsement of this wonderful new discovery, ACTONA.

"I find," he reports, "that ACTONA contains, in effective combination, those ingredients which help eliminate the poisons caused by fermented and undigested food improperly eliminated from the system."

"These poisons make themselves known by such symptoms as a tired, worn-out, depressed condition, loss of weight, inability to sleep well, headaches, lack of appetite, chronic constipation, rheumatic pains, acid stomach and certain skin disorders. The poisons which lead to this condition can easily develop more serious disorders if not attended to. I highly recommend ACTONA for their correction and elimination."

Such physicians as Dr. Roberts are so willing to endorse this ACTIVE Tonic because they know it contains the very roots, herbs, barks, leaves, berries and other ingredients that have been constantly prescribed for the elimination of these poisons.

If you suffer any of the symptoms Dr. Roberts notes, get rid of those poisons before worse sickness follows. Go to your drug store and ask for a bottle of ACTONA—the Active Tonic—in the green and red package. For your own sake refuse a substitute—there is only one genuine ACTONA.
